This post will cover all the sites you need for learning anything at your own pace, from science, music, and art to technology and skills needed for careers. The ability to learn online is a powerful tool that can help you learn pretty much anything – from a new language to a new skill to a new trivia fact. And it's not just for entertainment – today, learning is a way of life, and it's one that will serve you well. It can help you get ahead at work, make you more interesting at parties, and maybe even bring some extra money your way! Learning never goes out of style. The sites listed below are top learning websites for 2018. They are all part of the 'edutainment' industry, but don't let the word fool you. These are all websites that are serious about providing reliable, up-to-date, free content on almost any topic you can imagine. I got this idea for this post after reading some rather annoying comments about how people shouldn't bother learning anything new if they expect to be making a lot of money in the future. I think it's especially discouraging for people who want to get more stuff done at work or become more interesting at parties, but they might feel insecure about being perceived as not being 'smart enough.' So, why do we have a generation of job hunters that feel inadequate and don't want to even try? We live in a world that rewards success, and it can be pretty hard to measure success. The thing with people who are insecure about their lack of knowledge is that they tend to have less motivation, so it becomes harder for them to succeed. Unfortunately, the message has been sent again and again – if you want to succeed at anything, you need to work hard. And with the economy being as rough as it is right now, there are far more people chasing fewer jobs than ever before. So, what should you do if you want to be successful, but you don't want to lose hope? I think the best thing you can do in the face of adversity is to be proactive and take control. When in doubt, take charge and work with a strategy in place! It will help bring your goals into focus and give yourself a better chance of achieving them. All that being said, it's still up to you if you want your goals to be focused on working hard or not so much. But I think it's important to set at least one goal that might seem really ambitious when compared with other goals in your life.
